Experian shares are incredibly difficult to value, and any metric should be seen as part of a larger picture of Experian's overall performance. However, analysts often use some important metrics to measure the value of a stock. Experian's P/E ratio is divided into Experian's earnings per share (EPS) over a 12-month period, roughly 52 times the price/earnings ratio at the end. In other words, Experian shares trade at about 52x in recent earnings. Experian's PEG ratio can be calculated by dividing Experian's price/earnings-growth ratio by dividing the P/E ratio into growth – to give 3.0918. The lower rate can be interpreted as the fact that the shares offer better value, while a higher rate means that the shares offer a worse value. Because the PEG ratio provides more information about Experian's future profitability, it provides a wider view than the P/E ratio only. Taking growth into account, it can also help if you're comparing share prices for multiple high-growth companies. Experian's EBITDA Experian EBITDA (earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortization) is $1.6 billion. This has analysts forecast an annual dividend return going forward of 1.64% of the current stock value. This means that, within a year, based on final payments (unfortunately future payments are not guaranteed), Experian shareholders can enjoy a 1.64% return on their shares, in the form of dividend payments. In experian's case, it would currently equal about $0.65 per share. Experian's pay rate will be widely considered high, and therefore this stock may appeal to those who want to get an income. But keep in mind that companies normally also need to look at reinding in a good amount of net profit to ensure future growth. Experian's latest dividend payout 2020.
